

An icon in the adult industry,

Jesse Jane carries herself just like you imagine she would:

with PRIOR

Her blonde hair lustrous, her skin glowing,
and an irremovable smile locked on her adorable face, she spends the majority of her day on set laughing with the team and enjoying every minute of it.

From photoshoot to fuck-machine finish, she preserves her vibrant character and continues to make everyone smile. It is then when you realize exactly why she is a

because she is

Would you consider yourself very passionate when it comes to relationships or how would you describe your vision of love?

Jesse- Oh man, I'm the wrong person to ask! My love is more like kinky/sexual love. I don't make love ever. I like being thrown around and have fun by keeping it wild! I'm not really a romantic either just very, very sexual!

Taking a look at your social media profiles, we see love everywhere. You display so much affection for your fans and your friends. With friendship vacations like the one you recently took in Bali, what's your method for keeping such great relationships with other girls in the industry?

Jesse- You know what it is? The very few of us, we travel together, we connect, we get along great. I love my girls. Luckily, I still have great relationships with all of them even though I don't live in LA and I wouldn't trade that for anything!

Being such an unforgettable face in the adult industry is remarkable. Even after all this time you are still on top! Who would you say is your favorite and the most memorable co-star you've ever got the chance to film with?

Jesse- Oh wow. You know that's gonna be sooo hard. I got to work with such amazing people! One of my most popular scenes was the pirate scene I shot with Janine and it was a lot of fun. She was a great girl to work with and it was a tough challenge. All in all, it was perfect!

Sexually speaking, what are your favorite turn ons? What would a man or woman need to do to drive you crazy?

Jesse- Oooh not talk to me! If they would just keep eye-fucking me across the room without speaking to tease me. Then, they came super close to me without touching me but all of a sudden just grab me by the throat - I would fuck them right there! It would be on like Donkey Kong!

Traveling is something you really enjoy doing often and your success has brought you so many places. What's the most exciting destination you've visited and why?

Jesse- That is another hard question! Gosh I have been to so many places around the world. Bora Bora was always nice and Barcelona was great too! Oh, and Paris was one of my all time favorite cities!

What's it like being one of the industry's most recognized, notorious porn stars?

Jesse- It's cool! I kind of just don't think about it. That's why I live in Oklahoma, I don't follow the hype but when I am on the road and people know me it's always nice because they seen me before and are like "Oh you did so good in this scene" and that's always good to hear!

Can living your life be overwhelming at times, or is that one of the things you love the most?

Jesse- I like that part the most! It does sometimes get tiring with all the travelling, but I like it. I meet tons of cool people and get to do all sorts of different things so for me it's always been fun!

The industry changes on a day to day basis. What would you say is the biggest change back from your original debut in 2002 to what it is today?

Jesse- The industry has changed tremendously since I started and it's sad because it kind of changed for the worst. It was so lucrative back then but the internet sort of killed the industry as we knew it so to speak. Things work much differently now.

If you could go back in time with the knowledge you have today, would you have chosen a different path or done anything differently?

Jesse- The only thing that I can honestly say I would have done differently was: I would never sign a contract and I would start my own company. I got lucky and was not treated poorly during my career, but I would still have rathered to start it all on my own!

Since you came onto the scene, it feels like you have not aged a single day. What's your secret to looking so young and fresh?

Jesse- I drink a lot of water and I don't live in LA so I don't just sit there and party hard unlike most girls these days who sadly look way older due to partying. I like being responsible because I am a mom.

What tips would you give another woman who wants to give an unforgettable blowjob on Valentine's day for her special someone?

Jesse- I'm known for stellar blowjobs. You have to treat it just like a popsicle or a lollipop. You tease it, rub it, jerk it, slap it on your face, play with it, stroke it, tease it some more, pop it, go all the way down, deepthroat, suck it hard, repeat and never stop!

Can you share a fun fact about your personality that someone who has never met you would be surprised to find out?

Jesse- I'm a bit of a tomboy and I am also a bit nerdy! I will sit there and say stupid stuff and make stupid faces just to make people laugh not caring how I look because I am a dork. I start yelling really loud when sports teams make bad plays and everyone dies laughing!

You recently announced that you will be retiring from your porn career in January.

After taking the porn scene by storm for more than a decade, why did you make the decision to retire?

Jesse- I've been around for 15 years and I've had the best time of my life.

I'll always love everyone I have met but the industry has changed like I said earlier, it's not the same.

I've decided to move onto other things like my new product the Sexy Smile Kit,
I have new emojis coming out soon, and I am currently working on my book deal which I just signed too.

It's going to be called "A Double Life" and I am so excited!
I am just ready for something different!

31 MV Mag

You have had so many loyal fans throughout the span of your career and they continue to show you love every single day.

What are your final words to those who follow you and have supported your career right until the very end?

Jesse- I will ALWAYS love you guys. You are the best and I will never, ever forget you!

Shout out to Nobody's Darlings Rock n' Roll Barber Shop @rocknrollbarber

33 MV Mag

HOLD FAST!

Navigating the seas of love

Often irrational, rarely containable and always powerful, love is as universal as it is abstract. We may express and experience it differently but, while we seem to have a hard time locking down its exact definition, love is something we can all appreciate. Fickle yet enduring, fleeting though ever-present, equally capable of inspiring and destroying (at times simultaneously) love is the best and worst of drugs, equal parts stimulant and sedative, both muse and demon. As capable of pushing us to new heights as it is of rendering us virtually incapacitated, the all-consuming nature of true devotion is undeniable. Indeed, the very premise of love is a contradiction of sorts. The inspiration behind some of the greatest works of art known to man, from soul-wrenching ballads to classic fairy tales, the paradise of love found and the anguish of love lost certainly makes for a compelling tale in any format.

Whether you love your spouse, fine cigars, hockey or your pet iguana, even the most jaded among us know what it's like to be subjected to love's spell, though it is arguably more difficult to reduce to mere words the type of love that is applied towards living creatures. At its core, it boils down to acceptance, a willingness to look past someone's faults, to respect differences and to empathize, whether or not we agree with or even understand the other's perspective. To tolerate and even embrace someone's flaws and imperfections. If you can't imagine your life without your loved one, odds are you'll be more inclined to look past their shortcomings, whether it's your dog chewing your favorite shoes, your partner's thunderous snoring or your cousin's troubling political views. This is equally true with inanimate objects, as evidenced by our tendency to trivialize the nutritional hazards of a predilection for chips or cognac, for example, or to look the other way when it comes to the cons and instead focus on the perks of the people, places and things we love. But, as with any indulgence, the key is to not lose yourself in the haze of gratification. Where romantic love is concerned, it means staying grounded and not allowing yourself to be swept from the shores of passion into the riptides of obsession and resisting the temptation to let ourselves be carried too far away from our other focuses and responsibilities. It's crucial we remain connected to the "real" world that seems to fall away into beautiful little pieces, leaving behind remnants of a previous you. Shedding skins is a necessary part of growth and the seducing pull of love (and consequently, the opportunity for rebirth) is not one to be easily ignored.

Rather surprisingly, Merriam Webster's official definition of love includes "to feel a deep romantic or sexual attachment." But is a deep sexual attachment really love or is a carnally based affection simply lust? It's certainly not uncommon to confuse the two, given their addictive buzz and the way in which they both cultivate the overwhelming sense that the world is now a vibrant and thrilling place. Which leads us to the perplexing Catch 22 wherein people often claim that the most passionate sex occurs when they're in love yet a commonly cited reason for infidelity is that those with wandering hands eventually come to view their significant others in a more tender way that seems to hinder any desire to all-out defile them. In an effort to differentiate love-sex from lust-sex, I've heard many a friend justify their indiscretions against the proclaimed objects of their affection as the manifestation of an urge to treat a partner that one loves with affection, while treating a partner after which one only lusts as an object. Ultimately, the aim is to separate the "object" from the "affection". It's an unfortunate yet commonly expressed misconception that we can't have both, that we can't BE both, that we can't explore different roles and nurture different sides of ourselves and others. If, as we begin to view our partners in a life partner/parental capacity, we find ourselves becoming less interested in the explicitly of sexual acts and more focused on connectivity we should perhaps recall that sex is the ultimate form of connection, that it can be tender and raw and brutal all at once, as it is rightly meant to. When you take that level of intimacy out of the equation and pursue new partners, the opportunity may exist to treat them more as a toy or object and unleash the beast, so to speak, but as we become familiar with our new conquests, the spark will dim from those encounters as well. As a friend succinctly puts it "I adore my wife! Our sex life is great, she's hot as hell, it's just that i don't want to do the same things with her as I do with women I'm not emotionally attached to. And I don't want to hold them and run my fingers through their hair after sex the way i do with her. It's just...different." While a hard notion to wrap my head around, it does explain the phenomena of virtual strangers having such mind blowing sex and the age-old adage of marriage being the end of sex as we know it. But we can easily have lust, devotion and affection by simply being committed to sharing new experiences, to being open about our animal urges and dedicated to the evolution of our sex lives. We spend fortunes trying to fend off the tedium of routine in all other aspects of our lives, why not the same dedication in the bedroom? It takes effort to keep flames burning bright. Sustaining a fire of such magnitudes requires attention, care, maintenance, and an inherent desire to keep that flame going. As is true with most things, success demands time, patience and, to a certain extent, the right conditions.

Certain circumstances and factors favor the acceleration of a love response. A recent poll of over 300 couples in arranged marriages had a 95% response rate of participants claiming to be in love and happy 20+ years into the relationship. Which begs the question, as they could not possibly all just happened to have been matched with compatible individuals, did they grow to love each other in time and, if their love is indeed the natural result of the bonding that so often occurs when we are thrown into close quarters with anyone for an extended period, is it still defined as "romantic" love? And if so, what should we make of the almost opposite type of love bonds that grow from shared trauma such as soldiers in military combat or experiencing an earthquake or bank robbery with someone? In such cases the nature of the shared experience creates an almost instantaneous love, which makes one wonder: can we control and manipulate love by creating pseudo-bonds using time and/or trauma? After two decades of co-existing would we learn to love almost anyone as a result of mere companionship and proximity? It would definitely make for an interesting social experiment.

It's human nature to seek alliances, to want to be part of something. As a species we are hardwired to crave contact, to forge bonds and create connections, and to indulge in creature comforts be it a glass of scotch, a sensual touch or a blanket fresh from the dryer. That which soothes, replenishes or invigorates, whether food, sex, drink, literature, sport or film, also serves as an escape and while it's in man's nature to develop social bonds it is likewise in his nature to occasionally escape the constraints they impose. Perhaps this is why we often sabotage relationships in spite of ourselves by appointing unreasonable roles to our loved ones, for example expecting parents to be infallible heroes, partners to comfort, understand, support, encourage and entertain us regardless of what's going on in their own lives, friends to be our coaches, therapists, advisors, nurses and cheerleaders. The more roles we expect someone to assume, the more easily conflict and resentment begin to fester when this one person is unable to fill the many shoes we've laid out for them. As is so often the case, the more we expect, the more we set ourselves up for disappointment.

Despite the looming threat of emotional and financial ruin, the risk of rejection, the possibility of failure, of anguish, of loss that occurs when relationships fall apart we humans will cross time and space and put everything on the line to pursue what we feel to be "true love". We will spare no expense, no energy or resource in the name of love despite having learned from a young age that a failed romance is capable of ruining lives. In spite of this, and perhaps even because of it, whether we are drawn to the thrill of the chase, the challenges presented by the risk of defeat or the pure adrenaline of romance, we all tightrope clumsily along the blurred lines of lust and love, storytelling, laughing, crying and, if we're lucky, evolving along the way.

The best kind of art comes from pain and the best kind of pain comes from love: true love, lost love, unrequited love, love at first sight, all love through all eras, across all peoples and cultures is relatable. Love and hate are so closely bound in large part due to the extreme and intense nature of both feelings, hence why so many couples claim to have despised each other when they first met and why so many marriages end in messy and hateful divorces. While both love and hate can be draining and destructive, each time we experience either sentiment what we are truly experiencing is what it means to be human. Love is ethereal and resolute, an infinite and timeless concept that transcends language, time and space. Whether yours is a love of food, flesh or video games, the key to healthy love is to never let your wellbeing fall too far from the forefront, to maintain some perspective and not neglect the pursuit of self-fulfillment or worse, replace it with a reliance on someone or something else to complete or validate you. Be the best version of yourself in order to bring out the best in others and all of your loves will flourish, whether maternal, platonic, carnal, romantic or otherwise. Whether you spent this Valentine's day engaging in self-love, romantic love or the company of loved ones (human or otherwise), whether you curled up with a book or a carton of ice cream, as long as you engaged in love (or lust;) of some sort you can consider your celebration a successful one.

-Christine Andrews

37 MV Mag

Taratasa By London Keyes

These days, hooking up with strangers shamelessly is a piece of cake. You create a profile on an easy to download app, you get matched with locals who have similar interests or who are at least in the same age group as you and from there its fully your discretion if you want to enjoy a sexual adventure together. Modern day love: Sex on call with no strings attached.

You are spending your first Valentine's Day as a single 20-something year old.
You have not always been in serious relationships but you usually had a hard cock to call your own on the most romantic day of the year.
This year, you don't have any booty calls in mind but you want to engage in some naughty playtime so you decide to try out one of these online apps.
The first match offered is a young bearded man.
A little rough around the edges just the way you like them and he lives under 20km from your front door. You:

A) Send him a message without thinking twice.
Why keep looking when the first option already has your mind wandering and your pussy tingling?

B) Like one of his photos. You want to send a subtle hint of interest, but not put yourself on the line too much in case he doesn't have the same things in mind.

London: Secretly I am a little shy and prefer a man to make the first real move.

You get a message in your inbox. It's him. He wants to know if you are free tonight. You are but you wonder what to say. You reply with:

(A) caution by saying - "Not much I was thinking of hanging out with some friends.

Unless you had something better in mind?'

B) confidence by simply saying - "You."

London: It leads to interesting flirty conversation and I like a lil foreplay banter.

After a few moments of flirtatious back and forth messages he agrees to meet you at the pub down the street from your apartment. You quickly haul on your best little black dress (the one that shows your cleavage and makes you feel irresistible) and smear some sexy red lipstick on your perfect lips and head out the door.

You arrive and he is waiting for you looking even better than he did in the photos. Because you love a man who is on time, you:

(A) Greet him with a smile and a hug before you enter the pub so you can press your DD's against his chest and give him an idea of what you've got going on under this tight dress.

B) Ask him if he wants to just skip the pub and walk around and talk for a little while. It might be February, but the cold is just another excuse to get close to one another. Besides, getting closer to your home only makes the hunt shorter, and the kill easier.

London: I like being a bit of a tease and flirting with my body as well

You walk for 6 blocks and you feel like even with all of the sexual tension, you already know a lot about him. Construction worker. 2 Dogs. Country boy. Loves cold beer, his mothers cooking and old muscle cars. In other words, a rugged man who is not afraid to use his hands, with a caring heart and a down to earth soul. You are sold. You're approaching your building so you:

(A) Think about inviting him upstairs but proceed to give in to your wild side and decide that a quickie in the alleyway behind your building would be much, much hotter. Staying warm is a priority right now.

B) Ask him if he would like to meet up again sometime and continue the talk because right now you just want to get to know him more before sleeping together.

London: I love being spontaneous and slutty. Fucking in public places is one of my favorite things

Despite the mixed emotions you felt, you are in the alley way and he has you bent over a piece of scaffold which was left by the building contractors. You are cold, but his big hands wrapped around your throat from behind as he thrusts you makes the temperature the very last thing on your mind. You feel great but you want a little more so you:

- A) Beg him to put a finger inside your ass while he continues thrusting so you can be overcome with pleasure before you reach breaking point.
- (B) Turn your head as far as you possibly can so you can whisper the kinkiest, dirtiest things in his ear to drive him absolutely crazy.

London: I love dirty talk and love a man that can say nasty things back to me. I love a guy that can mentally turn me on.

You exhale with a giant moan as you feel the end coming close and you do everything possible to make the final few seconds count. You orgasm together at once and before you pull down your dress, you:

A) Let him take a picture of your ass covered in cum before saying goodbye so he can keep it, and crave you again soon.

B) Bite his lip hard before inviting him upstairs to spend the night because you could really use a few more rounds of this winter s-exercise!

London: If I'm really turned on I like to fuck multiple times!

Hope your Valentine's Day date with London Keyes was an unforgettable one! XO!

Hi guys! My name is Charlotte,

I'm from the UK. I am a curvy size 14 with blonde hair and green eyes. I am a 38H, got quite a big booty too and love to be spanked!
I would say I am quite kind and caring but I'm really naughty too. I currently work as a cam model but I am also a nurse!

I am submissive in nature and love being pinned down and choked.

I like to be your obedient girl who does just what she's told.

I am animal crazy and would have a farm full of animals if I could.

I love making sexy videos for ManyVids and enjoy bad boys wanking over them!

In the bedroom sometimes I top, sometimes I bottom but I will always want to play with your asshole and call you a pretty little girl. Maybe you'll put my panties on you? Annnnnd sometimes I'll just want you to fuck my ass hard while I use my Hitachi to cum."

